

The Journey of Electricity

Power Stations

Electricity is produced in Power Stations by burning fossil fuels such as oil, coal or gas to produce heat. This heat is used to turn water into steam in a boiler. Steam travels along pipes to a turbine where it hits the blades to make them spin. By spinning the turbine it drives the generator in the Power Station and electricity is produced.